COYOTE HOLE

Archaeological Site Recording and Management Issues at Coyote Hole, Joshua Tree, California

A Presentation by Daniel McCarthy

An abundance of petroglyphs occur at Coyote Hole Canyon (CA-SBR-216) in San Bernardino County. Because the site is divided among numerous private property owners, it has never been recorded, let alone documented. A grass-roots effort began four years ago to protect the site. Property owners, one of them being the San Bernardino County Flood Control District, were interested in aiding in site protection and were willing to transfer their parcels to a non-profit organization. Because of the location of petroglyphs on high, steep cliffs, a drone was used to aid in photography. There is an abundance of petroglyph panels and six pictograph panels along with much other evidence of prehistoric use over the last 1,500 years. Methods of recording, results of findings, and management issues will be discussed.
